Nowadays a large amount of advertising is aimed at children. Some people think this can have negative effects on children and should be banned.To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Nowadays, the amount of advertising aimed at children is increasing, and whether these advertisements should be banned has aroused a heated debate. Personally, I fully oppose this viewpoint and my reasoning will be presented in the following paragraphs.

Some people argue that advertisements aimed at children have negative effects on them, and this perspective is mainly based on the idea that children often have underdeveloped cognitive abilities. Advertisements are mainly designed to attract consumers. Compared with adults who have their own filters to various contents, children are easily affected and misleaded by any information presented in advertisements without considering and selecting. For example, they will mimic improper behaviors and then develop bad habits. However, in practice, such problems are not inevitable and could be addressed by a combined effort of governments and parents. The government can establish a legal framework related to these advertisements, such as clear industry guidelines and rigorous systems, to minimize the negative influences on children. Meanwhile, it would be useful for parents to supervise their children and explain the advertising content, in order to enable children to understand this content correctly. In the process, children cannot be misleaded but can develop their critical thinking.

In my opinion, advertisements are beneficial and should not be banned. The first reason is that these advertisements can help parents to choose products more flexible. Advertisements provide them with a lot of information about various products, thereby helping them to select personalised goods. To be more specific, different brands offer the same product, which means parents can purchase cost-efficient products or high-quality products according to their different preference.

Furthermore, these advertisements play a crucial role in education. This view can be supported by the fact that advertising aimed at children has become an effective way to promote healthy knowledge. Governments use the advantages of advertisements, such as strong visual communication, to make educational public service advertising. For instance, toothpaste advertisements show the significance of protecting teeth and the correct method of brushing teeth. Namely, children could adopt healthy daily habits by this relaxed but memorable way.

Given the arguments above, it is reasonable to assume that advertisements aimed at children are ultimately beneficial to both children and parents.

Some people hold that technological progress in the last 100 years has brought negative effects upon society. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

It is not uncommon to hear the opinion that technological development in the last 100 years has brought negative impacts upon society. Personally, I fully support this viewpoint, and my reasoning will be presented in the following paragraphs.

Some people suggest that technology can enhance the work efficiency. This view is mainly based on the idea that the various high-technology tools can assist people to finish their work. For example, online meetings and real-time cooperation make work more convenient and efficient. However, this is only the incomplete part of the picture. In fact, technology will decrease the work efficiency, and this view can be supported by the fact that technology causes distraction. People today are pushed to mulitask and are bombarded by technological stimulation, such as pop-up advertisements, social media notifications and chat messages. Therefore, people tend to check these information frequently, rather than focusing on their work, which causes their attention span becoming shorter.

Moreover, opponents argue that technology can reduce crime because monitoring devices become common. A growing number of monitoring devices are installed in different places, such as shopping malls, subway stations and restaurants, which means crimes are easily detected. As a result, crime rates will reduce. However, this viewpoint overlooks the fact that technology can trigger online crime, which is more hidden. Since the online crime is difficult to trace and regulate, it will become easier and more widespread. For instance, in contemporary society, there is an increasing number of online financial crimes as the users' identities can be stolen easily.

In my opinion, technological progress reduces the cultural diversity. Technology provides a global platform for people around the world to communicate. Thus, the content that people receive and share is largely similar. Namely, the way people think and interpret the world is quite the same, thereby reducing cognitive diversity, especially when the mainstream culture dominates the technological platforms such as social media. In the long run, the cultural creativity, which depends on diverse viewpoints, will decline.

Given the arguments above, it is reasonable to assume that technological progress has negative impacts on the whole society.
