Paragraph 1	There is a debate about the areas of focus for students at school. It is often argued that academic subjects provide greater value for students, while other areas such as music and sport have little use. However, I take the opposing view that these non-academic subjects should not be ignored.
Paragraph 2	Some people argue that academic subjects provide not only more knowledge but also better career opportunities. This is because, today, most high-paying jobs, such as doctors and lawyers, require extensive academic study, and even entry-level positions in companies often require knowledge of specific fields. In order to support themselves and their future families, students need to consider their future careers when choosing subjects to study. Therefore, it is important for students to focus on academic disciplines.
Paragraph 3	However, this does not discount other areas of life. Less academic subjects, such as music and sport, can provide great enjoyment and even career opportunities if students have a real passion for them. Furthermore, non-academic subjects have significant health benefits. Taking part in sports is good for physical health, and music and other arts subjects can contribute to mental well-being. There is a growing body of research suggesting that making music, as well as listening to it, has significant therapeutic value. Therefore, students can also thrive by focusing on these areas, and they should not be ignored in the school curriculum.
Paragraph 4	In conclusion, I contend that school should provide a balance of subjects for students to study. While academic subjects have a clear purpose, they are not the be-all and end-all, and some students prefer and excel in non-academic subjects. In addition, the health benefits of these subjects should not be ignored.

Some people argue that more academic subjects provide not only more knowledge but also more career opportunities. This is because, today, most of the high-paid jobs, such as doctor and lawyer, require extensive academic study and sometimes even entry level positions in a company will ask for knowledge on specific fields. In order to provide for themselves and their future family, students need to consider their future careers when choosing subjects to study. It is, therefore, important for students to focus on academic disciplines. (84 words)

However, this does not discount other areas of life. Non-academic subjects have great health benefits. This is due to the fact that taking part in sports is good for physical health, and music and other art subjects can lead to mental well-being. It is important for individuals, as well as societies to be happy and healthy in addition to having careers. As a result, these less academic areas should not be ignored in the school curriculum.

In conclusion, I contend that school should provide a balance of subjects for students to study. (1) While academic subjects have a clear purpose, they are not the be-all and end-all, and some students prefer and excel in non-academic subjects. Also, the health benefits of these subjects should not be ignored. (2)
